Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: .affords the best type of introspection, and the consequent self-set questioning attitude as to the causes of unexpected failures is the most stimulating kind of training in service which a teacher can receive. Improvement is almost sure to result from self-judgment of the merit of her own work by the teacher. 12. Progress in ability from grade to grade is shown, and places where greater stress needs to be put upon any subject are revealed. 13. Places in the system where certain subjects are under-stressed and others are correspondingly over-stressed are plainly set forth by test results. 14. Justification in results for praise or condemnation of any certain method that has been extensively used by any teacher is found when results of tests are tabulated and compared. 15. Standard tests throw light on the scientific phases of teaching and enable the supervisor to form more accurate judgments of school conditions. 16. Teachers are helped to broaden their standards for estimating attainment in any subject. 17. Tests show to teachers certain elements constituting real mastery of subjects which they have perhaps entirely overlooked in their presentations. They thereby assist in rounding out teachers ideas of what constitutes effective instruction. Precautions Necessary In Giving Standard Tests In order that the results obtained when using standard tests, be comparable within a system and with results obtained in other systems, certain precautions are necessary when giving them. 1. Examiners must thoroughly understand the nature of the tests they give and...
