Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Grass Thrips, Anaphothrips Striata The Thysanoptera form a group of insects which, on account of their small size and apparent insignificance, have been much neglected by entomologists. Their position with reference to other groups has accordingly been doubtful, and at various times they have been assigned a place in no less than three different orders. Linnaeus considered thrips as having affinities with the Hemiptera, and placed them in a genus immediately following his genus Coccus. While some of the followers of Linnaeus retained them in this position, others referred them to the Orthoptera and still others to the Pseudoneuroptera. More recently, however, they have been placed in an order by themselves, to which the names Thysanoptera and Physopoda (Physapoda) have been given; but, as the former has priority, it should be adopted. Although these insects are widely distributed and extremely abundant, being found in profusion in very many flowers, less than one hundred and fifty species have been described, of which about one hundred and twenty are from Europe and less than twenty from the United States. They range in size from one-fiftieth to one-third of an inch in length, the latter size having thus far been found only in Australian species. Undoubtedly the difficulties encountered in studying and accurately interpreting the mouth parts of such small animals have had much to do with the confusion regarding the systematic position of this group of insects. Their mouth parts (Plate III., figs. 19, 20, 21 and 22) are intermediate in form between those of sucking and of chewing insects, but they probably take their food by suction. The mouth parts and other structures of the head...
